

Figure 1b. Two views of the Chico Landing area taken in July, 2001. Discrete bands of cottonwoods (Populus fremontii) can be seen established along the former side channels of the river. As the river has migrated, and sediment has deposited, the length of the creek has grown and the extent of riparian habitat has increased. Bridge over Big Chico Creek is visible in both photographs.